About Zaneilia

My real relationship with finances and investing started when I was in college. We flirted a bit, like all young girls do. Then I found myself becoming more interested in learning about finances, including investing and financial planning.

The real courting happened when I started investing a portion of my monthly income to purchase Money Magazine and read it from cover to cover. At that time, I didn't completely understand all the concepts in the magazine, but I told myself that the more I read, the better I would understand the ideas.

I became very fascinated with stories that profiled people's financial challenges and potential solutions. In reading the scenarios, I could see myself helping others with sound financial advice, so I wrote it down in my personal journal of my dreams and aspirations as a career I will pursue.

In 2000, I made the commitment. I started my investment career with Edward Jones Investments and after success in the corporate world, I started Harris and Harris Wealth Management. Why? I was frustrated with the way investment companies treated women. The way they spoke to us, and the way they overlooked us. My focus would be to provide financial support to successful professional women, the way only a woman can.

I am happy to say that now my purpose and my profession are one. I am able to help women solve their financial challenges and achieve their dreams, whether that is having the freedom to travel the world or provide the best education to their children. This has always been my dream relationship with financial planning -- helping other women fulfill their dreams.
